The importance of cleaning in a catering business

See Page 140

Good food hygiene is all about controlling harmful bacteria, which can cause serious illness. Food Standards Agency inspectors will check if your business produces food that is safe to eat.

Whilst there are 4 key areas to remember for good hygiene, this document focuses specifically on cleaning. You can obtain data on the other areas by visiting <http://www.food.gov.uk/business-industry/caterers/food-hygiene>

This information has been supplied by the Food Standards Agency

Cleaning

Effective cleaning gets rid of bacteria on hands, equipment and surfaces. So it helps to stop harmful bacteria from spreading onto food. You should do the following things:

- Make sure that all your staff wash and dry their hands thoroughly before handling food.
- Clean and disinfect food areas and equipment between different tasks, especially after handling raw food.
- Clean and clear as you go. Clear away used equipment, spilt food etc. as you work and clean work surfaces thoroughly.
- Use cleaning and disinfection products that are suitable for the job, and follow the manufacturer's instructions.
- Disinfection products should meet BS EN standards. Check product labels for either of these codes: BS EN 1276 or BS EN 13697.
- Do not let food waste build up.

FROZEN LINE-CAUGHT FILLETS

POLARBRIS VESSEL LINE-CAUGHT FISH

Line-caught fish from small-scale fisheries don't have the bycatch or stock-depletion problems that are associated with trawling with massive nets. Line-caught fish also tend to be of better quality as the fish suffers less stress than trawled or netted fish.

Line-caught is a fishing technique of putting out a line that can be as long as 10 miles attached to vessel, to which are shorter lines with hooks. Commonly for the cod and haddock catching, small squids are used on the hooks to attract the fish.
